

President's Address

Here we are, another successful season completed and plans budding for 2005.

Success - All too often success in sports is measured and emphasized in terms of victories, points and other statistics. It is all too easy to become statisticians entrenched in numbers and subsequently lose sight of the fact that we as coaches, managers and administrators must also focus on developing responsible young athletes. We must teach responsibility by example.

I congratulate and commend all the players, parents, coaching staff and administrators who persevered the peaks and valleys of another demanding season. To those who experienced the joy of victory, well done! To those who tried their best and crossed the finish line, bravo! You have learned a very valuable lesson in commitment and dedication. Yours is personal victory.

It is these lessons that our young athletes face today that will better prepare them for the obstacles that they may face tomorrow.
